

Or the use of the word I'm going to use. I feel that-- I hope that-- I'm sorry.

That's OK. That's OK.

Tortured.

Yeah.

By the sense of not being a complete person.

Oh, my.

But one composed of contradictory facets--

Yeah.

--to an extreme.

Yeah.

I think we can end on that.

Well, Thank you. Thank you. Thank you for sharing all of this. Thank you for opening up. And--

Thank you so much too.

You're welcome. You're welcome.

I appreciate it. I see the cost-- just a little bit of what the cost has been. And I appreciated that you are making this available for other people to see that cost, to hear that cost, actually.

Right.

And to know what are some of the elements that went into it. And, in some ways, wars don't end, you know? And there still are people who suffer from them even if they never were under terror of losing their lives.

Right. I mean, yes. I agree and I feel that I have lived parts of the war and the Holocaust by proxy.

Yeah. Yeah. I will say with that that this concludes the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum interview with Dr. Edward Darell on November 7th 2017. OK.
