

All right. OK. As we--

We are coming to the end of the trail.

I want to come to the end of the street because I figured on one or two tapes. I didn't figure on that long a tape. Whatever came out, I want to say to my family, Kay, that I'm sorry that you never knew much of my family. I hope you get a little inkling of my background, of your background, and every word's true.

[? Julie, ?] I hope I didn't make a mistake in talking that way, but believe me, I love you, too. And Carrie and Josh, you should listen to it. Yes, it is what I said. It's my background, my own experience. I was lucky. Personally, I was lucky.

But there are so many people who were not as lucky as I was, including family that I had left and you never heard about, and I can tell you about it. But I tried to tell a little bit of my background and experience and through happening, and Marsha told it to you. So I hope you can listen to them once and find the few things that were important to me that I experienced, like and dislike

Maybe it will be a little bit boring I can understand it is too long. But it was never intended to be that long. So I hope you can make it through. I love you all, and I know Dad loved you, too. That's all I can say.

And I know my mother would have loved to see you grow up [INAUDIBLE]. Because [INAUDIBLE], you were two years old when she saw you the last time, two years the only grandchild.

So I wish you would have known also my father. I did not know Dad's parents, Dad's family, besides his sisters [INAUDIBLE]. But this was my family. They would have loved you. I know that. So that is all I can say.

Take care of yourself, and I hope you never witness the experiences that I had. And still-- I still call myself lucky because, in my experience, they're not the ones that many people had. So take care. I love you.
