

Simone Weil Lipman discusses her family and growing up in Strasbourg, France; her days as a Jewish girl scout; the rise of Hitler; dealing with anti-Semitism; her views on Judaism; her experiences as a volunteer internee social worker at Rivesaltes; her membership in the underground network at Ose; helping hide children in homes throughout France; how the war affected her family; her life and religious practices after the war; working in synagogues in Syracuse, New York; her children; reconnecting to those she had known during the war, including the children she helped save; how she started speaking openly about the Holocaust; living in France for three years and sharing her story there; revisiting the cities where she lived during the war; her views on Germany.