

Barbara Rodbell discusses her childhood in Berlin; moving to Holland; her family history and religion; life as a dancer in Amsterdam; how her instructor, Madame Gasco, and others from the underground helped protect her during the war; living next to Ann Frank; life in hiding; her other family members in hiding; immigrating to the United States with the help of a family friend, Dr. Kalinoffsky, from Berlin; moving to Greenwich Village to dance; moving to Baltimore; her challenges with dating; the birth of her children; returning to Holland; her children's lives; her views on religion in Holland; her feelings toward Germany and Poland.