

Stefan Czyzewski discusses life in his village, Leshnagorra, Poland during the war; how he and his father hid Jews in their house throughout the war; training to be a fighter for the resistance in a British camp in Iran; his experiences fighting in the underground resistance as a member of the Enezet; anti-Semitism within the Enezet; his family's activities during the war; being sent to a field hospital; recuperating from tuberculosis in a sanitarium, Statishere hospital, Bamberg, West Germany; daily life in various displaced persons camps, including Ashfenberg; his work as a stenographer for the police and becoming a detective at the Wildeflecken displaced persons camp; joining the United States counterintelligence corps; sneaking into East Germany for the United States Counterintelligence Corps (CIC); his father's experiences with Communism in Poland; his experiences interrogating suspects; his views on Holocaust perpetrators' punishments; his religious beliefs; immigrating to the United States on the ship General Hersey; establishing a life in Saint Paul, MN; his feelings about the immigrant experience in the United States; becoming an American citizen; getting married and starting a family; reasons why he has never gone back to Poland; his work with Mung refugees.