

Eva Cooper discusses watching the Nazis march into Budapest, Hungary; living in hiding; her religious identity; immigrating to The United States; living in New York and assimilating into American society; teaching in New York City; marrying her first husband and starting a family; her divorce; meeting her second husband; returning to Budapest; her views on Germany and German citizens; her love of art; the importance of teaching children about the Holocaust; and her views on Israel.