

Norman Salsitz discusses his prewar family life in Poland; living in a ghetto; witnessing the Gestapo shoot his father to death; joining the Polish Underground, Armia Kryova; being shot by a member of Armia Kryova; his views on the importance of revenge; life in hiding; being liberated by Russian forces; postwar life in Poland; joining the Army; joining the Polish Counter Intelligence Core; meeting his wife; uprisings in Poland; escaping to Berlin, Germany; working for Bricha; immigrating to the United States; his views on perpetrators during the Holocaust; his experiences with his American family members; starting his construction company; being a member of the George Washington Legion; going to Israel; his Jewish identity; Communism and the Cold War; his experiences with anti-Semitism in the United States; his book titled “Against All Odds;” American politics and contemporary acts of genocide; his work with the Red Cross; sharing his Holocaust experiences with school children; and the importance of remembering the Holocaust.