

Morris Kornberg discusses his prewar family life in Poland; the German invasion of Poland; being forced to move into a ghetto; daily life in the ghetto; being arrested and beaten by the Gestapo on suspicion that he was helping the Polish Resistance; his experience in a prison in Końskie; being sent to Auschwitz as a political prisoner; working in a coal mine in a sub camp of Auschwitz; being forced to go to Buchenwald on a death march and working in the sub camp Troglitz; being moved to Theresienstadt; his liberation with the help of the International Red Cross; postwar life in Poland; traveling to Prague; staying in sanatoriums; working for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA) in Germany; immigrating to the United States; living in Washington D.C.; working for a mattress company; getting married; how the memory of his experiences during the Holocaust have affected his daily life; and anti-Semitism in the United States.